U. S. ENERGY USE DOWN

Energy consumption in the United States fell 2.2 percent in 1974 after climbing steadily for more than two decades. The Department of Interior attributed the decrease to: The Arab oil embargo, higher prices, the economic slowdown, successful conservation efforts, and a relatively mild winter. The biggest drop in a single area was 3.4 percent for transportation. Jet fuel use declined 5.9 percent from 1973, while gasoline use fell 2.1 percent. In Virginia, gasoline consumption was approximately 6 percent less than in 1973.
